

As a good practice, we have taken into account the following considerations when sharing personal data with third parties (i.e. other than data processors):

- We determined the purpose for sharing personal data and have a legal basis to do so.
- We only share information that is necessary.
- We ensure the personal data is shared in a secure way.
- We provide information on this sharing to the affected data subject (if needed).

We include the following aspects in a data sharing agreement:

- What information is shared.
- For what purpose the information is shared.
- On what legal basis the information is shared.
- Who it was shared with/which organisations are involved in the sharing of the information.
- What information should be provided to affected data subjects about this sharing, who is responsible for providing this information and how this information will be communicated.
- Which measures are taken to ensure adequate security is in place to protect the data.
- What arrangements need to be in place to provide individuals with access to their personal data if they request it.
- The agreed common retention periods for the personal data.

More information regarding DPA, privacy or GDPR?

Ask our Privacy & IT experts at

WWW.DEGROOTE-DEMAN.BE